Daniel H. Levine, Professor of Political Science Emeritus, University of Michigan

A student of Robert Dahl, Daniel Levine has spent more than forty years studying religion and democracy in Latin America. Today the Catholic Church embraces its first Latin American Pope, but one from a nation with a harsh authoritarian past and a troubled relationship with democracy. What does this mean for the Future of Religion in Latin America?

Professor Levine's books include: Popular Voices in Latin American Catholicism, The Quality of Democracy in Latin America, and Politics, Religion, and Society in Latin America.

Reception to follow

Sponsors:
Center for Latin American Studies
Department of Religion
Department of Political Science
Center for the Humanities
Manning Dauer Chair